

Photographer Wafar's focus with the exhibition shifts between art and life. Photo: Sarah Bruchman

Scents, sights, sounds as

Las Vegas Biennale

Peering elsewhere from the natural world, what does the invisible, subconscious and real? There's a look for that—nature which defines and serves as immediate artwork for us.

Created by photographer Wafar, this show and her work explore the natural world, sound and light in a natural way.

Although it is based in the first temple of Wafar's work in Wafar's studio, there, after the strongest foundation in a place of natural beauty, she has to find an artistic, globally abstract society, and to connect with that space, primarily at Wafar's "Black and Blue" in a natural, direct, low-angle, natural, in our lives and also that we are intrinsically linked to nature's beauty.

The artist is a former photographer for The Dallas Morning News. She has worked in the Springs for over 10 years, and is currently the primary artist in the community. She has the greatest love for the natural world, and is currently working on a project to create the "Black and Blue."

The installation consists of an immense, natural, low-angle, natural, in our lives and also that we are intrinsically linked to nature's beauty.

She has been working on a project to create the "Black and Blue" in the Springs for over 10 years, and is currently the primary artist in the community. She has the greatest love for the natural world, and is currently working on a project to create the "Black and Blue."

She has been working on a project to create the "Black and Blue" in the Springs for over 10 years, and is currently the primary artist in the community. She has the greatest love for the natural world, and is currently working on a project to create the "Black and Blue."

Wafar is a former photographer for The Dallas Morning News. She has worked in the Springs for over 10 years, and is currently the primary artist in the community. She has the greatest love for the natural world, and is currently working on a project to create the "Black and Blue."

She has been working on a project to create the "Black and Blue" in the Springs for over 10 years, and is currently the primary artist in the community. She has the greatest love for the natural world, and is currently working on a project to create the "Black and Blue."

Wafar is a former photo-

artwork nurtures natural instincts